

WHEELS OF JUSTICE.

They Revolve Steadily in the Police Court Today.

Many Victims Find Themselves Underneath—Chickens Were Too Tempting for Several—Drink Controls Others.

Judge Taylor was on hand promptly at 1 o'clock this morning to greet the early morning procession of prisoners. There were thirty-nine unfortunate in the cells and nine of them were women. There were very few strangers in the party, so that Bailiff Kendig had no trouble in explaining to them what was necessary over under the wheel of justice. Most of them, however, beneath the wheels of justice, will follow the wheels of a work house vehicle during the remainder of the summer.

Sadie Herzog, a little woman who has been a regular court visitor for a number of years, was leader of the procession.

"And she's dead sober," was the remark of Bailiff Kendig, "the first time she has appeared in such condition for a long time."

Sadie Burke was her maiden name and she still resides with Washington. She met a soldier named Hough and they were married, although Sadie's male acquaintances and companions were numerous.

When she had been driven out of Rider's castle she went to Langdon station, and there she received a good bath, disorderly conduct and a volley of profanity attracted general attention to the old shanty.

Recess was called and talk of holding an information meeting was indulged in.

"GUILTY," said Sadie when arraigned.

"Is she the woman who keeps that ranch at Langdon," said Officer Kenny.

"It's one of the most disorderly houses I ever saw," said the officer.

"What have you to say for yourself?" asked the court.

"Sixty days."

James Bangsworth was the name given by a little black boy who was arraigned on a charge of larceny.

A great number of complaints have been made about persons sleeping in the empty cars of Long Bridge, the Potowmack Bridge, "and I found the boy there. He's a stranger in town."

"Where's he from?"

"Just landed."

"Best here two days."

"Can't remain this day longer."

Good Cross, a young colored woman, plead guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct and went down in default of the usual fine.

Two Strangers From Danville.

Danville, Virginia, was the place from where two negro tramps said they came. George Dixon and William Butler were their names.

"I saw these men in Anacostia yesterday and they were acting suspiciously," said Joseph Robins. "I followed them and they separated and went in different directions. One of the men had six chickens in his hand and he sold them before I could get to him."

The officer said that after being arrested the men admitted that they stole the chickens and were acting suspiciously.

"We came from Danville," said one of the men, "and had been as far as Baltimore looking for work. We wanted to get work, we started back and spent the night near the stock yards. This morning when we awoke we found a tree over our heads and we took them."

"Why did you take the fowls?" asked the court.

"We were hungry," was the response of the prisoner. "We hadn't had anything to eat for two or three days."

"We had a few hours," was the judge's little pup.

Then the other prisoner told a similar story and the judge gave them sixty days each.

"We have $1.50 taken from the man who sold the chickens," said the officer. "What about it?"

"Are the men charged with larceny?"

"No sir."

"Then the money will have to be returned to the man from whom it was taken."

The money was handed to one of the prisoners and it was taken to the workhouse.

Eliza Watkins and Rose Taylor, colored girls who disturbed the quiet of Navy place, and guilty and were down in default of one.

Daniel Webster was also in the procession. He had been down the river right and was here to see what he had induced caused him to use language as newspaper correspondents and familiar with the press.

He was a member of Congress, and he had been doing a specialty term.

"I know the name of the house for twelve years," said Jackson, "and she always lets me pick apples from the ground in the summer."

"Now the lady later in the morning," said the officer, "and she said she allowed the boys to get apples off the ground in the summer, and she always lets me pick apples from the ground in the summer."

"She was the judge's little pup," was the fact that causes some annoyance, while the procession as the result of his affliction.

"He didn't take the proper precaution," said the policeman. "He and his wife, and the man and the judge gave him the time to leave."

William Lee disturbed the quiet of H street and Policeman Masters arrested him.

"Guilt," was a young colored man who had been here to see what he had done.
